

Singapore is a city-state with limited land and high urban density. Paradoxically, these are our strengths because we are presented with boundless opportunities to work with numerous communities in placemaking so to develop sustainably.

Besides, at Singapore Polytechnic School of Architecture and The Built Environment, we acknowledge that community comes first in the process of placemaking.

Hence, we engage with stakeholders and communities for our students' projects to experiment with different ideas and programmes to activate public spaces in aim to connect people in various precincts across Singapore.

Join us at our End of Year Show 2023 as we showcase projects from our graduating cohort, exploring the notion of placemaking and enhancing communities.
